“ I remember visiting Larry and Sandy's house in the summers as a kid to swim. In between pool time, Larry was always willing to take the time to show me his radio equipment and the guns and knives that he had collected through the years. As I got older, I noticed that Larry greeted everyone with a big, warm smile and a firm handshake. I have no idea how it came up, but one piece of advice that Larry gave me was to cut my fingernails round and my toenails square. This would prevent ingrown toenails he said. I've cut them that way ever since, and I haven't had an ingrown nail yet! I'm sure that is just one of many examples of the wisdom he shared over the years with other people. May his memory be eternal.
